PhD position in Dr. Irene Salinas laboratory, Department of Biology, University of New Mexico

Description:

A 5 year position to conduct a PhD under Dr. Salinas' supervision. The project will focus on the mechanisms of mucosal immunity of fish and will include both evolutionary and applied aspects of research. Irene Salinas is part of CETI, a center dedicated to evolutionary immunology. Dr. Salinas' laboratory website link:

https://sites.google.com/site/irenesalinasremiro/

The selected candidate will be supported for 10 semesters through a departmental teaching assistantship and well as research assistantships. Start date: Fall 2015. Application deadline: January 2015. The selected candidate will be announced in March 2015.

Requirements:

Preferred applicants should have a BSc in Biology, Biochemistry or any other related biomedical degree. Laboratory experience in immunology, molecular biology or cell biology is desirable. Those with a Masters degree and previous publication records will be reviewed favorably. Both US and non-US students are eligible. All applicants need to present GRE scores at the time of application. Non-native English applicants will also have to present TOEFL scores. For other information regarding the application deadlines, application process, cover letter, letters of recommendation and transcript records please visit: http://biology.unm.edu/graduate/graduate-process.shtml

Other information:

The Biology Department at the University of New Mexico is a very diverse Department with 47 different Faculty and over 120 graduate students. It is located at the heart of Albuquerque, New Mexico, US. New Mexico is a beautiful state especially for outdoor lovers, full of wonderful culture, tradition and great weather.